ABSTRACT

Profitability is the ability of a bank to make profits within a certain period of time. The level of fluctuation in bank profitability will affect public confidence and the development of banking itself. Bank profitability is influenced by several aspects including factors such as credit risk, market risk, liquidity, capital adequacy and operational efficiency. In order to face competition in the banking industry and to maintain trust and fulfill the needs of society in the global era, every bank must maintain a healthy level, especially profitability. The test of this study is to determine the effect of non-performing loans, net interest margins and loan to deposit ratios on the profitability of the banking sector listed on the Indonesia Stock Exchange (BEI) in 2017-2019. The sampling technique used was purposive sampling, and obtained as many as 20 samples of banking companies. The data analysis technique was done by using multiple linear analysis with the help of SPSS 21 for windows. The results showed that the non-performing loan variable had a negative effect on profitability as measured by Return On Assets (ROA). Meanwhile, net interest margin and loan to deposit ratio have a positive effect on profitability as measured by Return On Assets (ROA).
