

ABSTRACT

Students who are active in organizing and working have more duties and responsibilities than other students, so that students often experience various obstacles and decreased perseverance in academic activities due to various activities. Students who have high grit mean they have consistency of interest, and persistence in trying to achieve the desired goals, for that it is important for students to have grit or perseverance in carrying out activities. The purpose of this research is to see the grit picture of students who are active in organizing and working. The participants in this study were three students who were active in organizing and working. This research is a qualitative research with a phenomenological approach. Data collected using interview and observation methods. The results of data analysis showed that the three participants had consistency in their interests while still prioritizing academic activities, and perseverance in trying was seen from the three participants who always tried to do their duties and responsibilities as students despite experiencing many obstacles.
